pleted the task of the local police and private detectives, who had been holding Adams since his arrest early Wednesday morning. Adams, who is also known as Walter Stacey, was declared by the detectives to have been one of the two men who beat police lieutenant Burns, of Chicago, into insensibility in a saloon, where he tried, single handed, to capture them on the night of Sept. 19. When Adams was arrested by the St. Louis police he was entered on the books under the name of Stacey and a charge of murder placed against him. It was explained that he was a suspect in a local case. In the meantime his photograph, taken a few hours after his arrest, was sent to Chicago. There it was identified by lieutenant Burns as the picture of one of his two assatlants.

Mexicans Not Molested.

The Mexican employes of the camp were untouched, nothing was taken from them, and, it is said, they stood from them, and, it is said, they stood around and grinned while the rebels helped themselves. From the rebels' knowledge of everything in the camps, it was evident to the Americans that they had been informed by some of the Mexican employes of the company. Upon arriving at the headquarters camp, the rebels first secured the payroll, over the possession of which they roll, over the possession of which they scrambled; then they went to the corral and took every animal fit to ride. Returning to the buildings, it is said, they cleaned out the commissary of everything catable and wearable, packing it many the stolen unleads. In the ing it upon the stolen animals. In their demand for every gun and weapon in the camp they even went through the trunks of the women searching for weapons, scattering the women's clothing all over the place. They had clothing all over the place. They had demanded a certain revolver that Joe Place was known to have, and Place had agreed to give it to them. In the meantime, Mrs. Joe Place, who had the gun, was compelled to surrender it to a rebel, who strapped it on himself and left. When the rebels arrived with Place and the gun could not be produced, they began to abuse him and threatened to kill him if he did not tell them instantly where it was hidden. Mrs. Place had to go out among the crowd of rebels to hunt up the rebel who had taken the gun from her, in order to save Mr. Place from being shot. Mrs. Lee Webb, wife of the time-keeper for contractor Orr, was also present and the rebels went through her belongings hunting for weapons. her belongings hunting for weapons. They took nothing belonging to the women except a manicure set, which was in a small leather case. After looting the camp of everything portable, they demanded red cloth of Mrs. Place and made a flag, which they put on a pole above the camp. This caused considerable dissention among the rebells and they finally took the considerable dissention among the rebels and they finally took the flag down as the majority were of the opinion that the flag might betray their presence to the federals. Before leaving the camp, the rebels tore the telephone down and demolished it. They forced Orr to accompany the band as they left, taking him with them several miles to an abandoned camp, where they turned him loose.

Look anneh Raided. Park Look arrived here this morning to report to his father. George-Look, that their ranch was raided by rebels yesterday and their Mexican ranch manager held for ransom. The Looks are extensive ranch owners of the Casas Grandes district. A portion of the rebels are camped on their property, located only five miles southeast of Casas Grandes, and as many miles east of Pearson, at both of which points federal garrisons are located Says Rebels and Federals Friendly. Gerome Elliott, "Shorty," the negro barber, returned Thursday night from Pearson with a story of the rebels and federals waving at each other across ravines and calling each other "amisos," that made "Shorty" decide that Pearson was no place for a hardwork.

Santiago Mestas, exmayor of Juarez, was arrested Friday morning by city detective George Heroid in a store on South El Paso street. The detective stated that he was informed that Mestas was wanted by the federal authorities. Mestas was taken to the city jail, and Friday afternoon transferred to the county jail by state ranger C. H. Webster. It was stated that Friday morning was the exmayor's first visit to El Paso since he was deposed in Juarez.

Pearson was no place for a hardworking barber.

Elliott said that the rebels had raided the Peak construction camp, near Cumbre, in addition to the Orr camp, and had forced Mrs. Peak at the point of a gun to deliver everything of value. She succeeded in hiding the gans and some personal property under the stove, he says, but everything else, even the hats and shoes of the Americans, was taken at the point of guns. This raid occurred Tuesday, Elliott says.
